

Privacy: What Stays on Your Mac

Where your content goes, and where it does not.

Content Brain is built to be handed your entire body of work without worry. Here is exactly how it treats it, in plain terms.

It runs on your Mac

Your vault, your downloads, your transcripts, and your Voice DNA all live in a folder on your own computer. Nothing is published, and nothing is handed to anyone.

It asks before it touches anything

It never scans your disk, opens a folder, or pulls from an account until you have said yes to that specific thing. The opening interview only maps where your content is. Nothing is accessed until you approve it.

You only connect accounts you own

To pull your YouTube or your Drive, you point it at your own account, and it only pulls your own content. You are never asked to hand over anyone else's data, and it never creates accounts on your behalf.

Even transcription is local

Turning your videos and audio into text happens on your Mac: free captions where they already exist, and a local tool called Whisper for the rest. Your recordings are not uploaded to some service to be transcribed.

The one thing to understand

Content Brain runs inside Claude Code, an AI assistant. To organize and analyze your content, tagging it and building your Voice DNA, the AI reads your text, the same way it reads anything you ask Claude. That reading is what does the work. It is used to build your vault, not to publish or sell anything. If you would not paste a particular document into an AI, keep it out of the folders you point Content Brain at.

It never invents your content

It only brings in what actually exists. It will not fabricate a transcript, a quote, or a voice trait. If something cannot be found, it tells you plainly instead of guessing.

It is all yours, in plain files. Everything ends up as plain text you own, with no lock-in. Back it up, move it, or delete any of it whenever you want.
