

What It Will Ask You

A two-minute prep so your setup goes smoothly.

Content Brain starts with a short, friendly interview, one question at a time, no forms. You can be rough and refine as you go. Having these three things loosely in mind makes it fast.

1. Your handful of themes

The 3 to 7 big ideas or named frameworks you keep coming back to, the things you are known for. These become the labels every piece of your content gets tagged to, so they matter. If you have a website, Content Brain can read it and suggest a starting list for you to fix, so you never start from a blank page.

2. Where your content lives

Roughly where each type of your content sits. It walks you through it one channel at a time:

- › Writing: blog or articles, a newsletter (Substack, Beehiiv, and the like), LinkedIn, X, any books or PDFs.
- › Video: YouTube, courses, webinars, recorded calls or Zoom sessions.
- › Audio: your podcast, and its host if you happen to know it.
- › On your computer: any folders of videos, documents, or recordings.

You only need handles, links, or a rough location. It will not touch anything yet: this step is only mapping. Access comes later, and only with your say-so.

3. Brand voice vs. personal voice

Whether the way you talk as a person is basically the same as your brand voice, or noticeably different (a polished brand and a looser you). One answer, and it decides whether you also get a separate Personal Voice DNA.

Nothing to gather ahead of time. You do not need to prepare documents or collect files. Just have your themes, your channels, and that one voice answer loosely in mind. It reflects everything back so you can correct it as you go.
