

Content Brain

One place on your Mac that holds everything you've ever made: organized, searchable, and in your own voice. It's guided the whole way, and you don't need to be technical. Point it at your content once, and it builds you a complete foundation to create from.

Nothing to prepare. It finds your content wherever it lives. Plan about an hour of attention spread over a longer stretch (some downloads run on their own). You can stop and pick up right where you left off anytime.

01 Set it up once

1 Install Claude Code
(free, from Anthropic) at claude.com/claude-code. Open Terminal, type `cclaude`, press Enter.

Add the plugin.

Paste these two lines, one at a time:

2 `/plugin marketplace add rolandfrasier/content-brain`

`/plugin install content-brain@dragonfly`

Run it.

3 Type the command and just talk to it from there:

`/content-brain`

02 What it does for you

- › Checks your Mac and installs a few small free tools it needs.
- › Interviews you about your business, your big ideas, and where your content lives.
- › Finds your content everywhere : YouTube, podcast, newsletter, site, files.
- › Sets up your vault (the free Obsidian app) and opens it for you.
- › Transcribes all video and audio into searchable text.
- › Tags it to your frameworks and builds your Voice DNA.

03 What you end up with

Everything in one place

An Obsidian vault holding all you've ever made, organized and searchable, that you fully own.

Nothing ever lost

Tagged to your own frameworks, so you can click a theme and see everything you've made about it.

Your voice on file

A full Voice DNA set, so anything written from here on sounds like you and not a robot.
